Fund Manager's Comments

The fund was up 0.09% in December and up 4.91% for the year. Our Beta was low during the year as our average net long exposure was at 11.88%, but 2017 has been a good year in terms of Alpha generation. On the portfolio level, we closed Ralph Lauren and Kroger positions in December as we reached our price targets in these two names.

2017 was definitely a year where the stars aligned for risk assets and passive investing. Global growth, trade, PMIs and corporate earnings all synchronised to provide a powerful tailwind pushing valuations and multiple to all time high. The S&P enjoyed 12 positive months in a row in 2017, which is extremely unusual combined with very low volatility and little dispersion. All in all, this was not an easy year for Long/Short strategies.

2018 should be a tipping point for global QE and the coming changes in global monetary policy are not priced in and appear underestimated. After the recent tax cut in the US, the rising twin deficits (federal and trade) might continue to put downward pressure on the dollar as it has historically done. Growth has been outperforming Value for almost a decade but we think that Value investing is ready to come back soon. In conclusion, we think that last year's market behaviour might not continue in 2018 and that our strategy should be better suited for a less linear market environment as we like to play reversion to the mean and contrarian investment themes.
